for ordinary consumers to hear and understand.60

To be effective, a disclosure also generally must be made contemporaneously with the misleading claim it is intended to qualify. For example, disclosures that subsequently inform consumers of a natively formatted ad’s commercial nature after they have clicked on and arrived at another page will not cure any misleading impression created when the ad is presented in the stream of a publisher site. This approach also reflects and is consistent with longstanding public policy, as codified in the CAN-SPAM Act61 and Telemarketing Fraud Act62 and found in Commission cases,63 that material misrepresentations as to the nature or source of a commercial communication are deceptive, even if the truth is subsequently made known to consumers.

B. Misleading Claims About the Nature or Source of Advertising Are Likely Material

Deception occurs when an ad misleads consumers about a material fact.64 Material facts are those that are important to consumers’ choices or conduct regarding a product.65 Misleading representations or omissions about an advertisement’s true nature or source, including that a party other than the sponsoring advertiser is the source of the advertised product or the advertisement.66 Consumers with such a misleading impression, for example, are likely to give added credence to advertising messages communicated and to interact with advertising content with which they otherwise would have decided not to interact.67

The Commission presumes that claims made expressly and claims the advertiser intended to make are material.68 The Commission also considers certain misleading formats to be presumptively material. Depending on the facts, false claims that advertising and promotional messages reflect the independent, impartial views, opinions, or experiences of ordinary consumers or experts are presumed material.69 Similarly, the Commission views as material any misrepresentations that advertising content is a news or feature article,70 independent product review,71 investigative report,72 or scientific research or other information from a scientific or other organization.73 Commercial communications that mislead consumers that they are from the government,74 a legitimate business, such as a well-known bank,75 or a marketing surveyor76 also are presumed to be material.

III. Conclusion

Although digital media has expanded and changed the way marketers reach consumers, all advertisers, including digital advertisers, must comply with the same legal principles regarding deceptive conduct the Commission has long enforced. This statement sets forth principles of general applicability on which the Commission will rely in determining whether any particular advertising format is deceptive, in violation of Section 5 of the FTC Act. The Commission will find an advertisement deceptive if the ad misleads reasonable consumers as to its nature or source, including that a party other than the sponsoring advertiser is its source. Misleading representations of this kind are likely to affect consumers’ decisions or conduct regarding the advertised product or the advertisement, including by causing consumers to give greater credence to advertising claims or to interact with advertising content with which they otherwise would not have interacted.

By direction of the Commission.

Secretary.
