

be able to see and stop a passenger attempting to light a match, flame or smoke on board.

6. In recognizing that APVs have a unique design and may encounter specialized hazard conditions, the USCG employs a “systems approach” to certification for APVs. To meet the USCG requirements, the APVs must have “a level of safety equivalent to that required for a vessel of similar size and service.” See Navigation and Vessel Inspection Circular (NVIC) No. 1–01. These requirements are met, “in part through a combination of design requirements and operational restrictions” and by considering “the entire vehicle and its equipment as a complete safety system.” Id. The RTDI APVs are certified to meet the USCG’s fire safety requirements for T-boats.

7. From its inception, the Safety Act has included a provision recognizing that some noncompliances may pose little or no actual safety risk. The Safety Act exempts manufacturers from their statutory obligation to provide notice and remedy upon a determination by NHTSA that a noncompliance is inconsequential to motor vehicle safety. See 49 U.S.C. 30118(d). In applying this recognition to particular fact situations, the agency considers whether the noncompliance gives rise to “a significantly greater risk than . . . in a compliant vehicle.” 69 FR 19897, 19900 (April 14, 2000). The design and construction of the APVs addresses the potential risks to passenger safety arising from fire-related concerns particular to these vehicles. The safety features present on the APVs provide a level of protection that is, at a minimum, equivalent to the vehicle safety standards so that granting the company’s petition would be appropriate.

RTDI concluded by expressing the belief that the subject noncompliance is inconsequential as it relates to motor vehicle safety, and that its petition to be exempted from providing notification of the noncompliance, as required by 49 U.S.C. 30118, and a remedy for the noncompliance, as required by 49 U.S.C. 30120, should be granted.

NHTSA notes that the statutory provisions (49 U.S.C. 30118(d) and 30120(h)) that permit manufacturers to file petitions for a determination of inconsequentiality allow NHTSA to exempt manufacturers only from the duties found in sections 30118 and 30120, respectively, to notify owners, purchasers, and dealers of a defect or noncompliance and to remedy the defect or noncompliance. Therefore, any decision on this petition only applies to the subject vehicles that RTDI no longer controlled at the time it determined that the noncompliance existed. However, any decision on this petition does not relieve vehicle distributors and dealers of the prohibitions on the sale, offer for sale, or introduction or delivery for introduction into interstate commerce of the noncompliant vehicles under their control after RTDI notified them that the subject noncompliance existed.
