Abstract of Information Available

Human remains representing, at least, six individuals have been identified in the Kikuchi Center at Kaua'i Community College. The two lots of associated funerary objects are listed in the item descriptions below.

The Kikuchi Center is an archive curating the work of Dr. William Kikuchi. Dr. Kikuchi co-founded the Archaeology Research Center of Hawai'i, ARCH, with Francis Ching, Jr. He inherited a collection of ARCH project materials, including ARCH projects 14–

152 III and 14–122. These project sites are located within North and South Kona on Hawai'i island. These materials were excavated circa 1980, and the founding of the Kikuchi Center and processing of these materials began in September 2022. In March of 2024, an osteologist analyzed the bones in the collection and positively identified the listed iwi kupuna as human. These bones are associated with Native Hawaiian sites, cultural layers, and items. Some bones and bone artifacts listed are too small for identification. Due to their association with the positively identified iwi kupuna, they are being listed for consultation and repatriation, and treated as human.

Item: Human remains. Site Name: ARCH 14–122. Geographical Location: Keahole, North Kona, Hawai'i. Collection History: Excavated for ARCH 14–122 project at Keahole circa 1980, these iwi kupuna were positively identified as human by an osteologist in March 2024.

Item: Human remains and associated funerary objects. Site Name: ARCH 14–152 III, Site 4564. Geographical Location: La'aloa, Kona, Hawai'i. Collection History: Excavated for ARCH project 14–152 III circa June 1980, these iwi kupuna were identified as human by an osteologist in March 2024. Associated funerary objects: one lot of basalt and coral abraders, basalt hammer and grinding stones, adze fragments, two small adze, one breadloaf sinker, three bone awls, wood and gourd fragments, urchin files, ili konane. Additional information: Site 4564 is identified as a blister cave and contained the iwi kupuna listed above.

Item: Human remains and associated funerary objects. Site Name: ARCH 14–152 III, Site 4579. Geographical Location: La'aloa, Kona, Hawai'i. Collection History: Excavated for ARCH project 14–152 III circa June 1980, these iwi kupuna were identified as human by an osteologist in March 2024.

Associated funerary objects: two fish hooks, one lot of coral basalt abraders and hammer stones, lot of urchin files, one horse shoe, one micro adze, lot of shell beads, shell fish hook fragment, lauhala fibers, one bag of faunal bone midden, one bone awl, and one dog tooth pendant. Additional information: Site 4579 is identified as a lava tube.

Item: Human remains. Site Name: ARCH 14–152 III, Site 4581, 4559, 6482. Geographical Location: La'aloa, Kona, Hawai'i. Collection History: Excavated for ARCH project 14–152 III circa June 1980, these modified fragments were too small for positive identification by the osteologist. Preponderance of evidence suggests high likelihood they are human, and consultation with NHOs resulted in the determination they be treated as iwi kupuna and repatriated.

Abstract of Information Available

Based on the information available, human remains representing, at least, one individual has been reasonably identified. The two associated funerary objects are one stone mortar base and one ground stone pestle. The human remains and associated funerary objects were removed from Contra Costa County, CA during a federal highway project in the early 1960s. The remains and cultural items were collected and removed from the site by a contractor and remained in the contractor's possession until his death, when they were passed to his descendant. In 2015 they were seized during a criminal investigation by the ISB. After seizure, the human remains were stored at Joshua Tree National Park until their transfer in March of 2022 to the curatorial facility at Lake Mead National Recreation Area. Cultural affiliation was determined based on anthropological, historical, geographic, and Native American traditional knowledge. These human remains and cultural items have not been treated with hazardous substances.
