Abstract of Information Available

Human remains representing, at least, four individuals were removed from Placer County, CA. These unproveniented human skeletal remains were given to Professor David L. Jennings, teacher of anthropology and geography courses at Los Angeles City College (LACC), by student Robert Marx in the 1950s. While attending LACC, Robert Marx, who later became a noted shipwreck hunter and underwater archaeologist, spent his weekends hunting for gold along the American River, localities from which we believe these Ancestors were likely removed. The human remains consist of one femur, one right mandible fragment with five teeth, one cranium and mandible with eight teeth, and one cranial fragment.
