Abstract of Information Available

A total of one cultural item has been requested for repatriation. The one object of cultural patrimony is a wooden mask. The mask was accessioned by the Museum in 1903 and is described in Museum records as being used for maternity rites. The collector, Harriet Maxwell Converse, was a Euro-American folklorist and historian who was born in in Elmira, New York, in 1936. Converse was an avid collector of Iroquois objects and persuaded Tribes to transfer historic objects to the state museum in Albany for preservation. She also inherited a family collection from her father and grandfather. Museum records state that the requested mask is Oneida and was collected from the United States. The original date and place of collection is unknown, though Converse's collection activities primarily occurred within the state of New York.

While it no longer does so, in the past, the Museum applied potentially hazardous pesticides to items in the collections. Museum records do not list specific objects treated or which of several chemicals used were applied to a particular item. Therefore, those handling this material should follow the advice of industrial hygienists or medical personnel with specialized training in occupational health or with potentially hazardous substances.

Determinations

The American Museum of Natural History has determined that:

Requests for joint repatriation of the cultural item are considered a single request and not competing requests. this notice and to any other consulting parties.
