

trends that affect public perception. This empirical brand and opinion research is necessary to evaluate current public perceptions, advise senior U.S. Navy leadership on how emerging global issues will be received, and plan strategic communication strategies around the release of information.

CHINFO uses the quantitative data collected quarterly from representative online panels to evaluate public knowledge, favorability, capability perception, and engagement with the Navy. These insights allow CHINFO to adjust its public communication efforts, address areas of low awareness or misunderstanding, and brief senior leaders on national sentiment regarding defense capabilities, spending, and emerging threats.
