Abstract: In most cases, people are not allowed to collect plants in national parks. However, federal law and certain regulations (36 CFR 2.1(c)) allow exceptions, including situations where a federally recognized Tribe has the legal right to gather plants for traditional purposes.

Under 36 CFR 2.6, members of federally recognized Tribes may gather plants or plant parts in a park if their Tribe has a gathering agreement with the National Park Service (NPS). These agreements honor Tribal sovereignty, support government-to-government relationships, and ensure that NPS applies the rules consistently across parks.

Section 2.6(f) of the regulations explains how NPS and a Tribe work together to create a plant-gathering agreement. After an agreement is completed, NPS issues a permit that authorizes Tribal members to gather specific plants. Only enrolled Tribal members who are designated by the tribe to gather and whose Tribe has a long-standing, historical connection to the park—and whose connection existed before the park was created—may gather plants. The gathering must be for traditional cultural purposes, must be sustainable, and cannot be for commercial use. The information collection covered by these rules includes:

- A Tribe's request to enter into a plant-gathering agreement.
- Information needed to develop the agreement, such as the Tribe's traditional connection to the park, the cultural purpose for gathering, and details about the types and amounts of plants to be gathered.
- Information submitted if a Tribe appeals an NPS decision denying a request, such as documentation of the Tribe's historical connection to the park, traditional practices, or potential effects on park resources.
