and member organizations that provide displayed liquidity will continue to be eligible for the generally applicable displayed-liquidity credit. In terms of intermarket competition, the change concerns an optional credit in a market where exchange execution services are subject to extensive competition from other exchanges and off-exchange venues. If the elimination of the supplemental credit is unattractive to market participants, they may adjust their order routing practices, and competing venues may modify their own fees and credits in response. Accordingly, the Exchange does not believe that the Second Change will impair the ability of members or competing order execution venues to maintain their competitive standing in the financial markets.
